

Writing-Intensive Course Requirement

Criteria

Courses included on a list of writing-intensive courses would be expected to satisfy the following criteria:

1. Writing-intensive courses must be small, enrolling no more than approximately 20 students per instructor.
2. In such courses, at least 50% of the final grade must be based on written work.
3. Writing-intensive courses must require students to do a substantial amount of written work: at least 15 pages, not including drafts and exams, spread out over the course of the term.
4. Writing-intensive courses must also provide explicit instruction in writing.
  - Instructors might require students to revise in light of detailed feedback, to hand in drafts of papers, or to re-work papers that have already been graded.
  - Instructors might familiarize students with the rhetorical conventions operating in particular disciplines.
  - Instructors might meet periodically with students to review writing or arrange for students to meet with tutors or in peer groups.

Faculty who believe that a particular course or set of courses fulfills the expectations of the requirement without conforming precisely to the listed criteria may petition the Committee on Instruction for approval. The committee will make determinations on a case by case basis.
