WHAT'S UNIQUE?

I also particularly loved the library of El Escorial. I hadn't known that the idea of "liberal arts" was such an old and cherished ideal, and to see theology, philosophy, and logic all depicted side by side, as partners not adversaries, was striking to me. I didn't realize how old that concept truly is, of balancing these sometimes contradictory concepts. It was really beautiful for me. (Student, D-Term Class, 2022)

Ultimately, I am glad that this course challenged my value systems, as I was able to gain sincere appreciation and acceptance of topics and objects I often tend to dismiss in my academic life. (Student, D-Term Class, 2022)

Getting use[d] to the layers of history in these spaces was also something very new to me [...] The Great Mosque of Cordoba was probably the space that I had to grapple with the most, because there was both a respect for different sacred spaces, but also a sense that the Catholics parts were growing and threatening to take over the Mosque. I found this to be a really powerful and angering experience, at the same time that I was experiencing the beauty and sacredness of the space as a whole. (Student, D-Term Class, 2022)
